

Truth About Russia

What's the likely thing Russia will resort to once it finally realises its delusions of winning were completely ludicrous and they have failed?

I would posit the idea that Russia has already realized this.

For the past week, the battle map shows little movement. The Wagner Group is still pushing towards Bakhmut, but gaining only tiny increments. That's it.

At the same time, Russia is launching huge numbers of missiles to knock out civilian electricity and water. It's as though Russia expects General Winter to rush in, freeze thousands of Ukrainians to death, and save tRussia from the quagmire they are unable to extricate themselves from.

This indicates to me that the Russian leadership realizes their conventional forces cannot defeat Ukraine and that the West will not give up on Ukraine, so the last resort is to hope that civilian misery will be the the ultimate defeat of Ukraine.

If all that is true, then I think Russia has made yet another very bad miscalculation.
